Wade H. McCree Jr. Awards for the Advancement of Justice

Sponsored by the Michigan Press Association Foundation

The Wade H. McCree Jr. Awards for the Advancement of Justice are named for one of the most distinguished lawyers and judges in Michigan history. The Hon. Wade H. McCree (1920-87) served as a circuit, federal and U.S. Appeals court judge and as solicitor general of the United States from 1977-81, arguing in that capacity 25 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court. He was a champion of equal rights and accountable government and dedicated to advancing a greater understanding of the vital role of journalists in a free society. This is the 50th year these awards have been presented to Michigan journalists.

The winners:

- Reporter Kara Berg of the Detroit News for series of stories on "Michigan Kids keep dying on Child Protective Services' watch."
- Reporter Lauren Gibbons of Bridge Michigan for her series of stories on "Juvenile Justice Carries High Cost: Crippling debt for parents."
- Reporter Andrea Sahouri of the Detroit Free Press for her column "Exposing Racism, Harassment, assault at Detroit's Renaissance Center."
- Reporter Heather Catallo of WXYZ-TV for her reporting on "Problems in Probate: Fighting for Accountability and Access."

The Michigan Press Association Foundation was established in 1980 to support, encourage and recognize the quality, vigor and fairness of journalism and a free press in the State of Michigan. The Foundation provides college scholarships for journalism students and sponsors the Michigan Journalist of the Year award. To donate or learn more, visit https://michiganpress.org/mpafoundation.

Molly Abraham

Restaurant critic set the table for Detroit dining or generations of readers in Southeast Michigan and beyond, the name Molly Abraham was synonymous with restaurant dining. In a career that spanned seven decades, Abraham's stylish, detailed, unpretentious restaurant critiques graced nearly every publication in Metro Detroit. She was the only journalist to have written for the Detroit Times, the Detroit Free Press, The Detroit News (twice), The Oakland Press, the Detroit Sunday Journal strike paper and Hour Detroit Magazine.

Through thousands of reviews, in a medium that creates few household-name celebrities, Abraham became an icon — even though a menu covered most of her column photo.

Readers trusted her; chefs and restaurant owners feared her, yet respected the fact that Abraham was consistently fair, thorough and complimentary whenever possible. "To be featured in a Molly column meant you had made it ... and in some cases, wished you could crawl underneath a rock," recalls former Detroit celebrity chef Keith Famie. "Molly is as much responsible for Detroit's unique culinary heritage as any of us chefs."

A Detroit native and University of Detroit graduate, Abraham understood the unique cultural mix of the region's people and their dining choices. She was just as likely to review the swankiest upscale eatery as a neighborhood's favorite greasy spoon.

Beyond that, Abraham was a shining light wherever she worked and a friend and mentor to countless journalists. She helped lead the drive that unionized the News editorial department and walked out with her fellow union members in the newspaper strike of 1995. She grew from a writer whose career began in an era where women were relegated to the "society page" to become one of Detroit's most popular and respected journalists. Molly Abraham was all of that. She died of natural causes in 2023, but her impact may never be forgotten.

John Bebow

Investigative reporter helped build bridges

ohn Bebow has had ink in his blood since childhood. From delivering the Lansing State Journal as a seventh grader in Mason, Michigan, to investigative reporter at both The Detroit News and Detroit Free Press, to helping start MLive, to founding Bridge Michigan and growing it into a vital news source, Bebow has helped build Michigan journalism.

Bebow grew up in Ingham County and graduated from Western Michigan University. He worked at the Lansing

State Journal, Traverse City Record-Eagle and Ann Arbor News before accepting a reporting position at The Detroit News. There, he covered the mob, corruption in casino development and trouble in the city water department. He deployed to Iraq to report on Operation Desert Storm for the News in 2003, and was injured in a military truck crash. Bebow helped manage MLive in its infancy and, after a stint at the Chicago Tribune, he returned to his home state where, for the Detroit Free Press, he helped investigate how Baker College took advantage of students.

In 2006, Bebow took the most impactful risk of his professional life, launching the nonprofit "think and do" tank, The Center for Michigan. As CEO, he was the driving force behind the 2011 creation of what is now the nonprofit, nonpartisan publication Bridge Michigan. Under his leadership, Bridge won hundreds of state and national awards. Bebow more than quadrupled its budget and grew its staff to more than two dozen. Perhaps most lasting in his legacy, he showed a new generation of entrepreneurial journalists how to thrive in a rapidly changing news environment.

As Bebow spends less time in the newsroom and more time knee-deep in the Au Sable, his imprint on Michigan journalism will continue for years to come.

Carolyn Clifford-Goss

A legacy of compassionate journalism

arolyn Clifford has been a beacon of excellence in Detroit's television landscape for more than two and a half decades. Her success is a testament to her unwavering dedication and commitment to the highest standards of broadcast journalism.

In 1989, Clfford embarked on a path marked by the pursuit of refining skills, crafting narratives and delivering balanced coverage. Inspired by legendary journalists such as Bill

Bonds, Robbie Timmons and Cheryl Chodun, Clifford honed her craft, intertwining heartfelt stories with unadulterated truths, keeping the focus on pressing issues. Beyond her role as an anchor, Clifford's influence extended to health reporting.

Her exploration of the AIDS epidemic and coverage of breast implant-related health concerns catalyzed policy reforms and heightened healthcare awareness. Her impactful one-hour special, My Answer to Cancer, fused medical expertise with personal narratives, etching an impression on viewers.

Clifford's legacy extends beyond her reporting, reverberating through her compassionate engagement in critical situations. Her efforts supported those grappling with adversity, spotlighted crucial issues and advocated for change.

For instance, Clifford's collaboration with the nonprofit Pictures of Hope paved the way for a college scholarship for a young rape survivor. By intervening to avert the eviction of an elderly ex-mayor, Clifford also championed for the vulnerable.

Clifford's coverage of tragic school shootings and vigils played a pivotal role in fostering healing and unity. Her interviews with survivors and prominent figures including Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer ignited pivotal conversations about gun law reform. In addition to her reporting, Clifford vigorously opposed domestic violence, championed literacy, provided tutoring to those in need and computer science and coding skills to underserved children.

Clifford's legacy encapsulates outstanding journalism, compassion and an unyielding commitment to change.

Eric Freedman

Top recognition in newsrooms and academia

ric Freedman soon realized that the reporters he met as a legislative aide to New York Congressman Charles Rangel had far more fun than the lawyers he knew.

So, in 1975, armed with a New York University law degree and no journalism experience other than an undergraduate magazine writing class, he applied for jobs in both fields. An editor at the Knickerbocker News in Albany, New York, sought a reporter who was a lawyer. Freedman took the job.

Freedman covered courts and then city hall. A favorite story he broke was of a brothel that operated under police protection in a city-owned building. He wryly recalled, "The madam's name was Trixie."

In 1984 he moved to The Detroit News' Lansing bureau. He reported on courts, government, politics, public affairs, and historical and environmental preservation. He once wore snowshoes to report on state conservation officials tagging moose calves in deep snow.

Freedman helped uncover a scandal that led to 10 convictions, including the director of the House Fiscal Agency and a member of the state House of Representatives. The chair of the House Appropriations Committee was removed and new oversight measures were enacted.

That story won the 1994 Pulitzer Prize in beat reporting.

After winning a dozen major professional awards, Freedman came to the Michigan State University School of Journalism as an adjunct instructor in 1996. As a full professor, he directs the school's Knight Center for Environmental Journalism and its Capital News Service. He is an international authority on press freedoms and has been awarded a dozen major academic awards, including three Fulbright Scholar Awards.

Freedman has mentored hundreds of students. He still reports and writes and he still has fun. "Journalism has got its moments," he said. "It has its economic uncertainties. But the reporting part I still enjoy."

Jeff Gilbert

The voice that tells the story of the auto industry

Teff Gilbert is the only radio reporter in the United States assigned to cover the auto industry full time.

With nearly a half century of broadcasting experience, Gilbert covers everything from new products to labor to financial issues to emerging technology. He is heard on Detroit's all-news WWJ Newsradio 950 and across the country on CBS News Radio.

The auto industry offers unique coverage opportunities. Gilbert often travels to auto shows, and to events where he can learn and drive new vehicles. His daily "Car Chronicles" feature is heard on WWJ and CBS affliates around the country.

Gilbert estimates he has driven 1,300 to 1,400 vehicles over the years. He currently serves as president of the jury that decides North American Car, Truck and Utility of the Year.

Gilbert regularly interviews industry leaders, visits factories and product development centers, increasing his knowledge of the industry. Major radio and TV stations often call on him to lend his expertise to important auto related stories. The Associated Press has honored Gilbert 15 times for his reporting skills. He has received hundreds of local, national and regional awards.

Prior to transitioning to the "Auto Beat," Gilbert covered a variety of breaking news stories, from plane crashes to presidential inaugurations to Rose Bowls and Super Bowls. Immediately after the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, he reported from all three sites. Before coming to Detroit, Gilbert worked in his hometown of Pittsburgh and several smaller markets in Pennsylvania and California. From 1986 to 1990, as news director of WWWW/WCXI in Detroit, Gilbert's department received four general excellence awards from the Associated Press, beating much larger news teams. In 1987, they received the National Headliner Award for "Consistently Outstanding Reporting."

Gilbert is married to Dr. Cheryl Kovalsi, an oncologist/hematologist at Karmanos Cancer Center in Lansing. Their son, Dr. Christopher Gilbert, is a neurology resident at Mercy Hospital in Grand Rapids.

Larry Lee

Architect of an innovative news platform

arry Lee grew Gongwer News Service into the daily must-read for anyone working in or around state government. As reporter, editor and eventually part-owner of Gongwer during his 39-year career, Lee stands as one of the great builders in Michigan journalism.

When Lee arrived at Gongwer in 1970, it was just nine years into its operations in Michigan and still on a tenuous footing, printing on awkward legal-sized paper and being as much a collection of legislative agate as news stories.

Lee, who became editor in 1972, was essential in transforming Gongwer into a respected news operation. It began pioneering coverage of the state budget and legislative committee hearings.

Raised on a dairy farm in Marion, Michigan, by his parents, Earl and Mary, Lee took the train to begin his undergraduate education at Michigan State University. He worked at The State News and interned at what is now The Oakland Press. After graduating in 1970 with a bachelor's degree in journalism, he landed at Gongwer.

Lee became a great mentor, sharing his knowledge and caring for his reporters, demanding without micromanaging. He introduced reporters to sources and helped them overcome setbacks.

They knew that at some point during the day Lee would stroll up to them with the dreaded question: "Whaddya got?" When the race grew hot to beat the competition on a major developing story, it was, "Whaddya know?"

In 1993, the owners of a web-hosting network approached Gongwer about putting some content onto the Internet, then little known. Gongwer went online three to five years before most news organizations.

Lee retired in 2009, but continues to help the next generation of journalists. He helped organize and helps manage the Mary Adelaide Gardner Scholarship at the MSU School of Journalism. In 2011, Lee began the Larry Lee Overseas Study Scholarship at the school.
